ABOUT BATH STONE

Bath Stone is an Oolitic Limestone comprising granular fragments of calcium carbonate. Originally obtained from the Combe Down and Bathampton Down Mines under Combe Down, Somerset, England, its warm, honey colouring gives the World Heritage City of Bath, England its distinctive appearance. An important feature of Bath Stone is that it is a freestone, that is one that can be sawn or 'squared up' in any direction, unlike other rocks such as slate which forms distinct layers.

As a natural material, Bath Stone varies in shade and will have naturally occurring fossils, veining and markings. This is what makes Bath Stone so beautiful and ensures that each surround has its own unique character.

HISTORY OF USES

Bath Stone has been quarried and used as a building material since Roman times. Utilised in ornate Architectural stone work and Fireplaces.

As a building material Bath Stone was shipped to all parts of the country after the Kennet and Avon Canal was constructed in 19th century. It has been used extensively throughout southern England for churches, houses and public buildings such as railway stations.

A view inside a bath stone mine, stacked up against the pillar are the original tools used. The wall on the left is studded with pick and tool marks.

NOTABLE BUILDINGS ARE;

Nash Ranges of Buckingham Palace
St Stephen's Church situated on Lansdown Hill in Bath
Claverton Pumping Station at Claverton, Bath
The Dundas Aqueduct nr Limpley Stoke, Wiltshire
Arno's Court Triumphal Arch (built around 1760) Brislington, Bristol

MANSIONS INCLUDING;

Lancaster House, Apsley House, Gatcombe Park, Goldney Hall, Tyntesfield, South Hill Park and Spetchley Park.

The original 1839 building of the Royal Berkshire Hospital, Reading, now listed grade II* by English-Heritage.

Butchers Row (constructed in 1855) Barnstaple, Devon

Bath Stone was also favoured by architect Hans Price who designed much of 19th century Weston-super-Mare.

PRINCIPAL STONE FIREPLACES

Timeless Design, Lasting Quality

Principal Stone makes buying a fireplace easy

By utilising both traditional methods of hand carving that have been passed through time for thousands of years from generation to generation and also accepting and adopting more recent skills to create Natural Bath Stone Fireplaces, we can design and craft surrounds that reflect the tastes and styles of today's living. Your fireplace is the central focus in your room and possibly your home so we pride ourselves on delivering the highest levels of design, craftsmanship and quality. All of our surrounds are meticulously created with Bath Stone, selected and sourced from the original Bath Stone quarries in and around the Bath and Somerset area.

Made to Measure

Our brochure displays our standard designs and sizes. However, every house and person's tastes are slightly different. To embrace this we can offer a full made to measure service to ensure that all our designs can be altered to virtually any size to compliment the individual space of your home. There is no premium on our made to measure Fireplaces, just pro-rata to size, if it's bigger it will cost more, if it's smaller it will cost less.

Bespoke Design

We can also offer a full bespoke design service working from your ideas, loose sketches, or images provided from magazines or the internet to create your own unique Bath Stone Fireplace. Together we can carve your ideas in stone.

As a natural material, Bath Stone varies in shade and will have naturally occurring fossils, veining and markings. This is what makes Bath Stone so beautiful and ensures that each surround has its own unique character.
